Terms of service for the Rinux Platform

Preamble

These conditions should be interpreted as a contract between the service provider (see top of page) and the user (see bottom of page).

1. Availability disclaimer

The user cannot make an availability claim. The services will be provided with due diligence. However, it is impossible to make sure that a given service is available at a given time. Generally, the services will be provided without interruption or disturbances. However, individual outages or failures may lead to unforeseeable damage and limited availability of services. These exceptions to regular operation will usually be taken care of immediately after they arise. Scheduled maintenance procedures will usually be announced with three to five days notice. Individual circumstances may require shorter notice.

Furthermore, the user cannot make an availability claim for a specific version of a service. The provider will trade off up-to-dateness and stability.

2. Data backup disclaimer

The user cannot make a claim on redundant backup of data. Regular backups are performed to provide means of fallback; however, it cannot be guaranteed that data from a specific date can be restored.

3. General disclaimer of liability for the service provider

The service provider can never be held liable. A law-offending user who makes use of the provided services to support criminal activities will be handed over to the German law enforcement authorities. If a country's authority (not necessarily a German authority) can make credible claims against the user, all available user data will be passed on to the authorities, along with according log data (if applicable) to aid legal prosecution.

This is also valid for credible claims made by third-party individuals or legal entities.

4. Announcement mailing list, obligation to notice

Every user will be added to the server-wide announce-only mailing list with the (initially chosen) e-mail address. The mailing list is used to inform users about upcoming maintenance procedures and changes in the provisioning of services. Subscription is mandatory. Messages sent to the list by the service provider will be considered noted by all users.

5. User account cancellation

Both service provider and client may cancel the corresponding user account without providing any reasons. The user may cancel her account at any time with immediate effect. The service provider may cancel a user account with 14 days notice of a month's end.

6. Changes in these terms

If required, these terms may be changed by the service provider to respond to current events. A change must be announced with at least four weeks notice by the provider. In this period of time, users may disagree with the new terms. If this happens, this agreement is cancelled and the according user account will be removed.

6. Charges / Fees

The user is under no obligation to pay any fees or charges for the services offered. The provider covers all arising expenses and reserves the right to shut down all services without prior notice in case of unexpected or unreasonable financial strain.

I agree to the above terms of use. I want to have a user account created on the Rinux Platform. If the data below changes, I will notify the service provider immediately.
